My dear Father

Having been disappointed in the time the people should leave I have time to add a few remarks to my already lengthy epistles. The most prominent topic on my mind is an attack of M^r Edwards. The poor fellow thinks that I have wickedly & wantonly attacked him. He does not know that I would just as soon ^ have tried to perform the trick of St Dunstan as do any such thing. In August of 45/ he told me when I requested my account from him that he had sent Rogers' with it. But it never having come he said he thought it amounted to about £30 exclusive of the food of some Bakhatla (once a day a meal of native corn) As he thought this might amount to about £5 I gave a bill of £35 & thought it was all over. A short time ago he sent an account made up to £45..15. As I had not recieved the former I could not compare it But as there were - a bill of £2.5..6 of which I had his own receipt as having been paid to him once and two months boarding which for both himself & me were charged to the Society I thought it right to ask some questions before giving away an additional £10. The two months boarding he stated positively to me he had charged to the society on two occasions I requested to know on what principle payment was demanded twice. He once pressed 20 lbs of very bad beads on my acceptance & said O you will give me an equal number when our box comes. The box was weighed at Kuruman & a note taken of the weight on the spot 200 lbs & upwards. The beads were divided & a note of the division put with my half into the box - this note shewed 88 $\frac{3}{4}$ as my half of 200 lbs. I imagined the 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ lbs of difference had been taken for the 20 lbs of very inferior beads & was satisfied But finding the 20 lbs charged in this account as I had furnished the half of the money I requested a sight of the invoice. A tar bucket was presented to me by M^r E. the ear of it was patched so poorly by himself before our journey was over it broke off As it seemed an old one & a new one I had formerly got from him was only charged 4/6 I demurred to paying 9/ as now for what I conceived an old one. I did not know that teak never became old. As he was putting down his gifts as debts I thought I might as well remind him of 10 lbs of tea which M^{rs} E distinctly borrowed from me. A cap which cost me 9/ was put down at 7/6. An American axe he borrowed & never returned I put down cost price then requested the production of the bill mentioned in another sheet

I received the enclosed meek communication late & returned the answer I likewise send for your perusal. I am quite positive as to the Society being charged for every iota of the expenses but as it statement was made on his own authority on the same authority I have to retract it & beg his pardon the which I do very willingly as you will see. Look at the last page & you will wonder still more at my folly in being deceived by such a character. Ross' conduct was so galling to me that I was glad to have any one to sympathize with me & I allowed them to go on in their slanders continuously because of the conviction on my mind that in reference to speaking against Ross I had been just as bad as themselves.

You will wonder that I grudge 6^d a day for my board 3^d would more than pay all I ate & my bed at Mabotsa was made just once in three weeks or once a month Did you ever hear me complain of being ill[-]nursed in my ^ lion sickness? No M^{rs} E scarcely even looked near me after the first few days & to get my arm dressed even when crawling with maggots I had to send for M^r E. - occasionally he came of his own accord but ~~if I had not~~ even when almost dead I would infinitely have preferred Bakhatla to dress it for me. It was evidently a grudge to him & how could it be otherwise he & she too were writing against me at the very time. Obligation on my part there is none unless in addition to neglect I ought to feel grateful for native corn and English corn boiled in milk my stomach was well nigh ruined for ever. It is but very recently that I got over the bad effects of their eternal boiled corn. Corn boild - Boiled corn like shovels full of the Everlasting pills of the Antients might have ruined the stomachs of ostriches. O it is a blessing to be allowed to eat as one likes I can never cease admiring the freedom I was far too polite in most things I would not do anything to give offence and as I tell them I believe my guilt in silent listening to their scandals is now justly punished in what they endeavour to fix on my character. If he troubles us more we shall send his epistles back unopened If he has never been slandered how very gratuitously wicked his & her slanders must have been-

[0003]

We have put up the mill. It does well but it is rather inferior to Hume's common mill. the latter grinds finer ^ & makes much less bran so we should be glad of the large one when you have an opportunity to send it. The trouble of sifting continually would be obviated if we had the large mill for wheat we should try & make this the maize mill - if that can be done - some small bits of wood came out of it when we tried it first so I took [it] down to see from whence they proceeded. I was sorry afterwards for Sechele was my assistant and turning it generally the backward way he & I bothered with it the whole day and failed after all But I got a thorough knowledge of it by the labour & as soon as I came out of the room next morning succeeded.

A Family Scene in Private

We had a practical exposition of your Phantasmagoria scene lately Mary has taken up the profession of Surgeon Dentist I was the subject operated on. The twin of that you extracted became very bad one night so up we got to it. I scarified & fixed on the tooth key & then the new surgeon dentist gave a wrench & I pulled her hand away in agony. It had come out a little way I pulled & pulled with a pair of shoemaker's nippers but every pull was like a haul at my entrails. On went the key again. Another wrench & I roared out "murder" It came a little farther but was still sticking doggedly. Another trial of the nippers forceps &c and then another effort with the key completed the first attempt at dentistry. We were a pretty sight in our ghost[-]ly dresses. I on the floor & Mary standing over me It was dreadful. "Teeth drawn at Chonuane /1 each" Mouth rinsed out afterwards with dirty water gratis

31st July. The men whom I engaged to go out for their hievers being at a distance were sent for but a week or two having passed ere they arrived as we were under the impression that M^r [A.] & M^{rs} A. would [come] we delayed thinking that the Bakwains would pass them on the road. I then went over to the boers & tribes in that direction & returning yesterday found that M^r Jeffries would pass by Kuruman. If three or four hievers can be got they will be very acceptable indeed

Will you remember to send some of my fine powder by some safe opportunity. It is I believe among some clothes Will you lend me your box of stones from one opportunity to another? I mean those you recieved from D^e Young. I shall take great care of them
